

Oral communication allows immediate feedback; the listener's face gives some feedback and the speaker can modify the message on the spot. The reader may give a cautious and guarded reply without letting the other see the really felt reaction. Clarifications can be sought and given at once