

The global trade of animals and poultry has significantly increased in recent years, facilitating the spread of diseases across borders. government agencies and veterinary professionals. Through proactive measures and international cooperation, we can mitigate the threat of imported animal diseases and ensure the sustainability of livestock and poultry production systems worldwide. Imported animal diseases pose a significant threat to the health and productivity of domestic livestock and poultry industries.