

The CRT and pRNFL thickness were higher in the Down syndrome group than the control group as determined by means of the measurements in the SD-OCT images, The authors suggested that this condition might be associated with macular developmental disorders in patients with Down syndrome