

You could explain the high rates of interest from three principles. The borrowers are using the issuer's funds, and the issuer needs to be compensated for letting the borrower use these funds. Credit card issuers need to acquire information on each applicant before a card is issued and this process is costly. Some borrowers do not repay for considerable periods