

However, one issue this mission poses for Mars is that a human presence on Mars could jeopardise one of our main reasons for being there – the search for life. Microbes and bacteria from Earth could spread and scientists would not be able to distinguish indigenous life from the microbes that humans had brought. The invaders might even kill any local life.