Endochondral ossification[1][2] is one of the two essential pathways by which bone tissue is produced during fetal development of the mammalian skeletal system, the other pathway being intramembranous ossification.In intramembranous ossification, mesenchymal tissue is directly converted into bone.

lakhasly.com © تم تلخيص النص بواسطة موقع لخصلي