

This quote shows how the animals, particularly Boxer, blindly follow Napoleon without questioning him. Boxer, the hardworking horse, adopts the belief that whatever Napoleon says is correct, saying, "If Comrade Napoleon says it, it must be right." Later, he even repeats the motto, "Napoleon is always right." Boxer, who is strong and loyal, believes that following Napoleon's commands is the right thing to do, even if the leader's decisions seem unfair or harmful. This represents how Napoleon manipulates the animals into trusting him completely.
