

Whether researchers choose quantitative, qualitative, or mixed methods depends not on their preference for one or another but on the suitability of the particular method for what they are studying and what they want to find out.