resulted in the withdrawal of the Romans from Britain, before addressing the arrival of the Anglo-Saxons in Britain. The decline of the Roman empire leading to the withdrawal of Romans from Britain As prosperous as it was, the Roman Empire ultimately collapsed. Various factors led to its fall: Military Problems: The Roman Empire faced invasions by barbarian groups, including Celtic and Germanic tribes. For some barbarians, these attacks were acts of revenge for earlier Roman incursions during the empire's expansion. Others sought to weaken the empire gradually in order to take control, particularly the Germanic tribes. In contrast, the empire's constant pursuit of expansion left many military powers outside its borders, making it vulnerable to such attacks. Economic Problems: Due to its relentless pursuit of expansion, Rome found it increasingly difficult to maintain economic stability. The need to build infrastructure in newly conquered territories strained resources, further complicating the empire's ability
