

The means of communication were very weak, for example, which prompted families to use what was called the “bulletin,” which is a piece of cloth hung above the house, or on its door, as a sign of the pilgrim’s safe return.