

Design: This is a simple, open calorimeter usually made from two Styrofoam cups nested together, with a thermometer and a stirrer. Function: It's primarily used for measuring the heat of reactions occurring in solution, such as neutralization reactions or dissolution processes. It's not sealed, allowing for exchange with the environment.