

On the very first look, both the questions seem trivial. Fibers are also used for illumination and are wrapped in bundles so that they may opt for a variety of other applications, including sensors and fiber [9] lasers. Many microscopes use fiber-optic light sources to provide intensely. Then why worry about sources? Similarly, the second question also has a very obvious answer.