

Because of its ability to function independently and produce favorable outcomes, the patient requires less medicine, which improves their quality of life and that of their family