

results showed that the mineral compositions depend upon the initial supersaturation of the magnesium content and tended to approach a steady-state equilibrium. The crystal forms which were precipitated at different (Mg^{2+}) : (Ca^{2+}) concentration ratios and different ionic products in artificial seawater were acicular (needle-like in form). 2). Some