

to begin with, one significant essential aspect that is worthy to be examined is that Henrietta Lacks' family was not properly informed or consulted about the use of her cells. Not telling or asking her family ignored their rights and shows problems in how medical research was done