

In general, we can characterize the normal force, N , as a contact force that acts at the surface between two objects. The normal force is always directed perpendicular to the plane of the contact surface