

The Tarragona Public Passenger Terminal designed by Hombre de Piedra Arquitectos is located in the Port of Tarragona, Spain. The Tarragona Public Passenger Terminal stands out as an example of contemporary architecture that blends innovative design with a strong connection to its location and function, offering a unique and efficient space for cruise ship passengers. This terminal is known for its striking and irregular parallelogram-shaped roof, which serves as the primary visual element when viewed by passengers arriving on cruise ships. Architectural Experience: The spacious interior is designed to reflect the nautical context of the port, allowing passengers to easily transition through the terminal while offering an immersive experience of the surrounding maritime environment.
