

Before the invention of money, people resorted to different means to trade. In this latter system, people exchanged goods for other goods of intrinsic value such as gold, silver and salt.