

Abstract Problem: The Palestinian educational system faces significant challenges in delivering personalized learning experiences due to overcrowded classrooms, limited resources, and the absence of intelligent assessment tools. Students struggle with self-directed learning, lacking personalized guidance that adapts to their individual learning pace and style. Teachers find it increasingly difficult to monitor each student's progress individually, especially in large classroom settings where one-on-one attention becomes nearly impossible.