

The world's energy needs are increasing rapidly because of population growth and technological development. To meet future energy demand, it is necessary to choose a sustainable and reliable source of energy that is affordable and long-lasting.