

In conclusion, while social media offers valuable opportunities for university students in terms of learning, networking, and social interaction, it also poses significant challenges that can affect their academic performance, mental health, and overall well-being.