

The series "Bridgerton" revolves around dramatic events that took place in empires during one of the Mamluk eras, where the most important thing for a girl is to find a life partner without focusing on studying or working. Our story begins with the Bridgerton family, where noble and well-known families are summoned to a grand event attended by the Queen, aiming to showcase the beauty of the girls and encourage royal marriage and romantic relationships. Noble families in London start preparing their daughters for this remarkable event. Despite the abundance of girls at this celebration, the new Duchess, Daphne Bridgerton, and her younger sister steal everyone's attention, especially that of the queen, becoming the focus of interest for all the young men in London. However, despite all this attention, the beautiful Daphne faces pressure from her family due to her older brother's jealousy and his frequent objections to any young man trying to get to know her. He hesitates to allow her to enter into a romantic relationship under the guise of 'protecting her'. After attempts by her mother and his hurtful words, his feelings are stirred, and he decides to allow her on the condition that she chooses her husband herself. Here, Lord Nigel Bebrooke proposes to her, but she refuses despite her brother's approval. However, due to persistent insistence at one of the evening parties, Lord Bebrooke tries to assault her in the garden, where she punches him. The Duke of Hastings, known for his power and influence in society, intervenes and agrees with her to pretend they are in a romantic relationship to achieve their mutual interests. Hers being to alleviate pressure on Daphne and increase the attraction of young men to her, and his being to stop his aunt from searching for a wife for him and to relieve pressure on himself, as she was adamant about him entering a relationship.