

In this technique, tracer particles are introduced into the flow and illuminated by a thin laser light sheet : that is pulsed to freeze particle motion. The results indicate that there exists the potential for integrating multiple fluidic subelements into aircraft components for improved performance. Using a spatial cross-correlation, the local displacement vector is obtained