

Engineered nanoparticles can be delivered to contaminated sites via injection, dispersion, or – immobilization in porous matrices, allowing for targeted remediation and controlled release. – Challenges include optimizing nanoparticle synthesis methods, minimizing potential toxicity to non–target organisms, .and understanding the long–term fate and transport of nanoparticles in complex environmental matrices