

Constance is in love with Hastings. Here we have the classical ingredient of many a comedy: the struggle between the young and the old. Constance wants, naturally enough, to retain her fortune, and has a common-sense approach to the jewels. Her mistake is in not inventing convincing material as she reads Hastings' letter to Tony