

Once a clone has been selected that expresses a sufficient amount of soluble, active serpin, glycerol stocks of that clone should be prepared and frozen at -80°C to ensure a continuous supply of viable yeast. A few of these are: batch versus continuous culture (primarily for secreted serpins), selection of optimal growth media, amino acid feed composition, feed rate, dissolved oxygen (DO_2) delivery, and aeration rate.