

One of the challenges I faced during my studies in the IT major was understanding the Indian accent of some instructors. Most of our professors were from India and spoke English with a strong accent, which made it difficult for me to fully understand the lessons, especially when technical terms were pronounced differently from what I was used to. However, I challenged myself and worked on improving my listening skills.