

Wholesalers: Wholesalers purchase the leather products in bulk from the manufacturing company and. 1 distribute them to retailers. They will ensure that the products are delivered to the right locations, such as wholesalers or retailers, efficiently and on time. Suppliers of Auto Parts: The manufacturing company will need to establish relationships with suppliers who provide the necessary auto parts for their leather products. These suppliers could include companies specializing in materials like zippers, buttons, and hardware. End Consumers: These are the individuals who purchase and use the leather products for personal use. Manufacturing Company: This is the heart of the supply chain, where the leather products are produced. Logistics Companies: These companies will handle the transportation and distribution of the leather products. They may also provide additional services like packaging or labeling. Retailers: Retailers are the final link before the products reach the end consumers. They sell the leather products directly to customers through physical stores or online platforms. The company will need to manage the .production process, quality control, and inventory management. 2.3.4.5.6