

And this merchant had three daughters whom he loved very much, and one day the merchant asked his daughters what they wanted from the market to bring to them when he returned home. The father went to work and on the way back, a severe rainstorm blew, which made it impossible for the father to reach his house, so he decided to take refuge in one of the castles located on the road between the merchant's house and the market, and he wanted to stay overnight in it until he could move to his house safely. The castle that the merchant entered was suspicious, and what made the matter even more strange was that the merchant had found a dining table equipped with many delicious foods, so extreme hunger prompted him to start eating and after he finished he returned to looking for the people of the place again, and reached the top floor of the castle and found a room. And when the merchant woke up the next morning, when he came out of the castle, he found some beautiful roses in her garden, and he remembered his little daughter, so he picked a rose for his daughter, and here the castle monster ran to the man, and shouted at him and He had spoiled the roses in the garden, and here the merchant shivered and told him: I have picked this rose for my little daughter. The beast told the man that he would forgive him if his little daughter came to the castle, and here, the merchant did not find it necessary to return to his home and bring his daughter to preserve his life, to begin the story of the princess and the beast, where the beast was waiting for her, the little princess was afraid of the appearance of the beast, and the beast began to exchange the princess talk. He looks at her with great admiration, and one day the beast told .the princess that he wished the princess to become his wife. to hurt his feelings
