

It has been scientifically proven that regular physical exercise can improve one's health and help prevent the development of a number of diseases. The study from WHO reports that around 60–85% of the worldwide population does not engage in enough physical activity nowadays. As a result, people get feelings of anxiety and depression.