

Low-tech AT tools are simple, often non-electronic devices that help students with disabilities participate more fully in classroom activities