

Unique features of polymeric nanocomposites such as excellent conductance, mechanical and chemical stability, light weight, presence of various active sites and their strong adherence to electrode surface made them valuable materials for the development of sensors. Hybridized materials showed enhanced conductivity, many active sites, great sensitivity and selectivity towards targeted pollutants