

The typical result of this experiment is the formation of smooth, circular, convex, and opaque colonies. Under a microscope, E. coli cells typically appear as Gram-negative rods