

The poet doesn't want to be with people anymore. The poet wants to lie placidly on the grass and look peacefully at the sky above him, untroubled by the problems around him, and causing no troubles to others.