

Angel Reese expelled during the Chicago Sky's defeat to New York Liberty. "This year is a significant milestone for the WNBA," King said in an interview with Christine Brennan of USA Today. The Sky's head coach, Teresa Weatherspoon, tried in vain to get an explanation from the officials regarding Reese's expulsion, stating, "I still do not understand what happened." Chicago Bulls player Lonzo Ball offered to cover Reese's fine through a post on social media platform X, formerly Twitter. Ball penned a message addressing the referee, "Ref who ejected @Reese10Angel is weak btw..." Great players such as Maya Moore, Sheryl Swoopes, Candace Parker, Diana Taurasi, A'ja Wilson, and Breanna Stewart have contributed immensely, but Clark's entrance now signifies a crucial stage. Breaking college records with sellouts and keen interest, women's sports are attracting more attention. This generation is key to elevating the league even further. "Reese collected her first technical infraction after seemingly addressing the referee Charles Watson following a questionable call." "She said something to the ref," stated Sky guard Marina Mabrey to reporters later on. "The official decided that was the right call."
