

Kim Jong Un's tenure has been significantly shaped by North Korea's nuclear ambitions, a strategy likely initiated by Kim Il Sung. Kim's administration is rapidly advancing towards a viable nuclear arsenal and the missile technology necessary to strike South Korea, Japan, Guam, and the U.S. mainland. During Kim's first five years, North Korea conducted five nuclear tests, including two this year—one being its most powerful and the first claimed to be an H-bomb.
