

Profile leveling is generally required by the designer to determine the elevation of points over a specific route such as road mark, railway, canal or a pipe line alignment. The procedure for determining the difference in elevation between two points has already been done in previous practical.