

One of Egypt's favorite traditions is the vibrant celebration of Ramadan. The communal aspect of Ramadan fosters a strong sense of unity and solidarity among Egyptians, regardless of social or economic differences. A culture of sympathy, compassion, and brotherhood among all people, not just Muslims, even Christians, as you can see Christians standing in the streets at iftar time, distributing juices and dates to Muslims until they break their fast, and you see Muslims inviting their Christian friends to break the fast during Ramadan. This cherished tradition not only deepens spiritual connections, but also strengthens family ties and strengthens the family.