

is caused by living organisms, specially viruses, bacteria, fungi, nematodes, insects, arachnids and weeds. Despite lacking the adaptive immune system plants can counteract biotic stresses by evolving themselves to certain sophisticated strategies. The resistant genes against these biotic stresses present in plant genome are encoded in hundreds. The defense mechanisms which act against these stresses are controlled genetically by plant's genetic code stored in them.