

Everyone knows the stereotype of technology in the workplace leading to the trendy Silicon Valley–style open office space with video games and beer on tap. Besides open offices, companies like WeWork have popularized co-working spaces as places where freelancers can have a place to work when they have no designated office space. Otherwise, why have an office at all?