

In 1952, Zinder and Lederberg performed a series of experiments on the typhoid bacterium Salmonella typhimurium; the results of which elucidated the phenomenon of transduction. When this fluid was mixed with met-thr+ cells prototrophic cells for methionine and threonine were produced.