

With the rise of the internet and smartphones, social media has become increasingly accessible. As a result, many social pressures have either arisen within social media, or adapted to it. This phenomenon is known as social media pressure which, if unmanaged, can have a negative impact on one's mental health. This has changed the way that many people interact, or are expected to interact with others.