

The soft palate or velum is seen in the diagram in a position that allows air to pass through the nose and through the mouth. When we make the sounds k, g the tongue is in contact with the lower side of the soft palate, and we call these velar consonants