

the French army had fewer doctors than veterinarians, transportation was non-existent and cases of bandages had been left behind. Those wounded who were able to do so headed for the nearest village – Castiglione -- in search of a little food and water; 9,000 reached it, pouring into houses and barns, squares and narrow streets.