

LSU's Flau'jae Johnson defends Hailey Van Lith from Caitlin Clark criticism. LSU women's basketball star Flau'jae Johnson has Hailey Van Lith's back. "No, no, we can't do that," Johnson said to interrupt hosts Byron Turner and Sean Ferrari Simmons, who piled on the point guard for her performance in LSU's loss to Caitlin Clark and the Iowa Hawkeyes in the Elite Eight of the 2024 NCAA Women's Tournament earlier this month. You could not guard that girl for 40 minutes. When Turner asked "what was the scouting report," Johnson quipped: "Interview over! I'm out of here!" The "Big 4" rapper went on to explain that she supported Van Lith, who guarded Clark for most of LSU's 94–87 loss to Iowa. Many were confused that LSU head coach Kim Mulkey didn't make adjustments and kept Van Lith on Clark for majority of the game.
