

Interferon function: used for communication between cells to trigger the protective defenses of the immune system that help eradicate pathogens. The secreted interferon then stimulates surrounding cells to produce other proteins, which, in turn, may regulate virus multiplication, the immune response, cell growth, and other cell functions.