

A rectangle can be a rhombus if it has all four sides of equal length. So, if a rectangle has equal side lengths, it fulfills the criteria for being a rhombus as well. However, not all rectangles have equal side lengths, so most rectangles are not rhombuses.