

The Consumer Protection Act or consumer Law is a subsidiary of the common law governing private legal relations between the consumer and the business sector that sells the goods and provides services. Consumer protection covers a wide range of topics, including (not limited to) product litigation, unfair business practices, fraud, and poor product definition.