

Language is characteristic of the human species: all human children (barring impairment) have the capacity to acquire language. Just as fish swim and birds (with a few exceptions) fly, humans talk. In fact, language is something that humans can't help doing! Wherever there are humans, there is language. If there is no language model to learn from, it seems that humans create language.