

but Ben says he is a coward. Biff and Happy don jackets, while Linda walks out in mourning clothes and places flowers down on Willy's grave. Charley tells Linda that it is getting dark as she stares at Willy's grave. Biff says that he is a dime a dozen, and so is Willy, but Willy insists that neither of them are unimportant. Crying, Biff asks Willy to give up his phony dream. Willy refuses to take the blame for Biff's failure. Willy is amazed to realize that Biff likes him. Willy can't believe Biff cries for him. Linda says it is the first time in thirty-five years that she and Willy were nearly free and clear financially, because Willy only needed a little salary. Biff tells Willy that he is not coming back anymore and that he has no appointment with Oliver. Willy does not believe Biff, and tells him that he cut down his life for spite. Biff takes the rubber tube out of his pocket and puts it on the table.